

[REDACTED]

You have referred two complaints to the Commission nationale de l'informatique et des libertés (CNIL) (referrals no. [REDACTED] and no. [REDACTED]) against [REDACTED] identified as the company that publishes the website [REDACTED] website.

Your complaints relate to difficulties encountered in exercising your right to the deletion of your personal data. You state that you have made a request to this effect in order to obtain the deletion of your data published in two articles distributed via the aforementioned website.

As you know, in application of the procedures for cooperation between European authorities introduced by the RGPD, the CNIL has forwarded your complaints to the Danish data protection authority, which is competent to investigate them because [REDACTED] is established in Denmark.

Pursuant to Article 77 of the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR), I hereby inform you of the decision adopted in this case following this cooperation procedure.

As part of the investigation of your complaints :

- On 15 January 2024, the Danish authorities asked [REDACTED] about the facts reported in your complaints.
- Having received no response within the deadline set, the Danish authority sent a reminder letter on 29 May 2024. The company did not respond within the new deadline.
- However, the Danish authority has since noted that the website [REDACTED] on which your personal data initially appeared - and which is the subject of the complaints - no longer appears to be active.
- When informed of the inactivity of the aforementioned website on 12 February 2025, you stated that you wished to "maintain [your] complaints in the event that the site is merely inactive, until it is proven that the site no longer exists".

On the basis of the above, the Danish authority has decided to take no further action on your complaints and to conclude the investigation of your case.

In doing so, the Danish authority relies on Article 57(1)(f) of the GDPR, which states that each supervisory authority shall deal with complaints lodged by a data subject and investigate their subject matter to the extent necessary.

The Danish authority's decision not to open a further investigation into your case is based on an assessment of the potential results of such a new investigation, in particular the extent to which it could help you in practice, or whether such an investigation would be appropriate to improve the level of data protection in general.

However, the Danish authority considered that these criteria were not met insofar as the website on which your personal data initially appeared now appears to be inactive.

Consequently, the Danish authority has decided not to open a further investigation.

Finally, without committing to initiate a new investigation, the Danish authority indicates that you could file a new complaint if the website becomes active again and publishes your personal data.

In view of the above, your two complaints are rejected.

Yours faithfully
